

The Story of Randimals

Ever wondered how the randimals were first made? Well, it is an interesting story to listen and tell. The Randimals story is about celebrating difference. It is about knowing that however unique you may be you are wonderful. The randamals have taken inspiration from Oliver, a basset Labrador mix. He was a mixed breed dog. The real story of randimals started at the Solar Pub. When the owner of randimal and his friend Casey talked about starting a toy company and they together drew some randimal. When he woke up in the morning, he looked at the drawings and realized that it was a great idea to start. But there were three problems the first they had no experience, money and time to start the toy company. Also they had full time jobs. The idea stayed till March 2020, their theater got closed, they had to return all the tickets. Both were worried and hopeless about what is going to happen next. Casey then said "Let's work on the Randimals." So, with plenty of time to start now, they started to read about how to make toys and how to import them from different countries. The next step was to find a graphic designer who could turn their dreams into reality. They found a graphic designer named "Sunita" from Nepal. So this is how the creation started. The next step was the names. For the names, the names of the two animals were mixed and randimals were created. Elarilla is the mother of all randimal. She teaches the amazing message "What makes us different, makes all the difference in the world." The randamals have now progressed into a collection of plush toys, figurines and hard toys.
